Enhanced Recovery

Enhanced recovery programmes at most hospitals are now a standard practice following surgery for many procedures, aiming to ensure that patients are as healthy as possible before receiving treatment, receiving the best possible care during their operation and when recovering.

An operation can be both physically and mentally stressful. Research has shown that the earlier a person gets out of bed and starts walking, eating and drinking after having an operation, the shorter their recovery time will be.

Having a particular focus on the recovery of patients following surgery can improve the patient experience, improve clinical outcomes and reduce the demand on inpatient beds.

3-stage Structured Movement Therapy programme

The 3-stage Structured Movement Therapy programme is suitable for patient recovery or people deconditioning from self-isolating (e.g. reduced muscle strength – power, balance and stamina), those experiencing poor mental health due to self-isolating, and people with a range of conditions whose rehabilitation programme may have been interrupted.

Rehabilitation and recovery through the Ethos Wellbeing Programme enables people to clear their airways, manage their breathing and promote a general sense of wellbeing.
